WORKING PAPERS

Who Paid for Low Real Rates, with Hanno Lustig and Robert Richmond

- Study whether long-term real interest rates are anchored by expected growth and risk, documenting that central-bank bond purchases push real yields below fundamentals-implied levels, with reversals during QT, and measure how the cost of these below-benchmark yields is distributed across investor sectors.
- Developed a dollar-weighted return methodology for short QE and QT windows: derived a covariance-based decomposition of the IRR–geometric-mean gap that separates investment timing within a policy regime from capital allocation across regimes, and a common-rate variant that restores exact additivity of incidence across holders.
- Developed the paper's initial demand-system asset-pricing framework, adapting existing models to link central-bank sovereign bond purchases, investor demand elasticities, and equilibrium real rates to study how central-bank bond purchases displace more elastic investors and affect equilibrium real rates.
- Constructed a cross-country dataset of ex-ante real rates, inflation expectations, and expected growth (CBO, SPF, Consensus Economics, Cleveland Fed) and of sectoral government-bond holdings and flows (U.S. Financial Accounts, UK ONS, Bank of Japan Flow of Funds); estimated fundamentals, GMM, and sector-flow regressions.

RESEARCH EXPERIENCE

New York University, Stern School of Business — New York, NY
Junior Research Scientist for Robert Richmond and Toomas Laarits — Aug 2025 – present

Policy by Committee

- Built an LLM-based research pipeline to extract and classify arguments from historical FOMC transcripts used to measure policymakers' beliefs about macroeconomic relationships.
- Deployed Gemini and Llama models on NYU's computing cluster and developed the document-processing pipeline converting FOMC records into structured inputs for empirical analysis.

Dollar Erosion: Understanding the Loss of Reserve Currency Status

- Supported research on the macro-financial consequences of a loss of U.S. dollar reserve-currency status through data collection, cleaning, empirical analysis, and revision of research materials.

Financial Markets Group, London School of Economics London, UK
Research Assistant for Tom Gosling and Cameron Peng Jun 2025 – Jul 2025

- Reviewed and synthesized the literature on investor sustainability preferences, portfolio choice, willingness to pay, and sustainable fund allocation, identifying empirical findings and methodological limitations.
